Orientirum

Team leader, C# developer

I supervised the entire development of the portal and served as an ideologist, product owner, product manager, lead developer, art director and sales assistant. Conducted code reviews of other backend developers and insisted on keeping the code clean. Introduced Clean Code, Clean Architecture principles to the team.

Unfortunately, the project was closed due to poor commercial development (I don't know how to do this, and there was no one else on the project).

33kita Web studio

Owner

I was in charge of the studio. I was looking for clients, signed contracts, managed projects, monitored the quality of work and acted as an art director.

Over time, I realized that working with a huge number of small clients is very difficult for me. I always had to keep in my head a lot of details about each client. So, I decided to work on one or two large projects.
